Of the once-stately city of Kish, today only ruins can be seen. It lies between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, about 13 kilometres east of the site of Babylon in what is now Iraq. Inscriptions in the ruins state that it was "the first city founded after the Flood." As the traditional first capital of the Sumerians, Kish was an early centre of civilization. In ancient times, the area was fertile, so wheat and other crops could be grown there. The Sumerians settled around a bend of the Euphrates River, where they built a city more than 8 kilometres long and almost 3 kilometres wide, which they strengthened against their enemies. Until as late as the time of King Sargon I, about 2300 BC, Kish dominated the Near East. Then it declined because the Euphrates River changed its course elsewhere, and when finally it was abandoned, desert sand covered its ruins. Archaeologists were excavating the ruins between 1923 and 1933, when they dug into virgin soil and found 18 metres below the top of the mound, remains of several cultures, from Neolithic times to the Christian era. The discovery of a four-wheeled chariot was astounding and it was the earliest known wheeled vehicle. Other discoveries showing the highly developed Sumerian civilization were thick-walled temple towers, canals and a library with some of the earliest known writing. (Kaynak: ELS)
